A LONG LOST SWORD FOUND. Given to a Courteons Southerner and Recovered After Years. Frederick Mather, superintendent of the New York State Fishery commission at Cold Spring harbor, has had a peculiar and interesting experience. In the winter of 1864 he enlisted in the One Hundred and Thirteenth New York regiment, which was shortly afterward converted into twelve batteries of heavy or garrison artillery. These batteries were instructed in gun drill at Washington, but when it became certain that there was little danger of the Confederates attacking the capital, the regiment was ordered into the field as infantry. They, however, clung to their title of the Seventh New York heavy artillery, a designation they had received on being transformed into gunners. On June 16, 1864, Lieut. Mather was in command of L company, which was the color company of the regiment, and be-longed to the First division of the Second corps, commanded by Gen. Hancock. The command was moving on the enemy's works at Petersburg, Va. On the right was the Irish Legion, and the two bodies diverged. The Confederate forces rushed through the gap, and the right of the One Hundred and Thirteenth or Seventh New York heavy artillery were taken prisoners. To save the colors Lieut, Mather determined to bury them. This he did, and he was in the act of burying his sword, a presentation from Battery I, on which his ame was engraved, when a southerner stepped up and said:

"Look here, Yankee, just drop that," and ordered him to move inside the enemy's

"I obeyed the order," said Capt. Mather, "and was carrying my sword in its scab bard, and belt in my hand, when a man in plain clothes demanded it of me. I saw he was a civilian, who had only come out to have a shot at us, and I resisted. During our struggle, and just as the man was about to strike me with his fist, an officer came up and indignantly asked if he was about to strike a prisoner. The man feil back and I handed my sword to the officer, who, thinking I was wounded, offered me hospitality, and I wrote his name and address on a New York Tribune that I had in HOLDEN'S . COMEDY . COMPANY, my pocket. Nothing could have been kinder than the behavior of my captor. I was subsequently confined in prisons at Macon, Ga., Charleston and Columbia, S. C., and lost the memoranda with the name of the man who had my sword. I had som idea that he was a Georgia man, and in my travels in connection with fish culture in the southern states have always been try ing to find some trace of him.

"A few years ago Capt. L. Brewster, who regiment, during the war, died. A south ern paper published that among his propcated with Capt. Brewster's representa-tives, and the old sword, scabbard and belt once more came into my possession. The scabbard has an indentation where a ball struck it in the battle. They are relics of a bygone faud, but I prize them very dear-

The Area of Colombia.

The superficial area of this big republic which extends along the Atlantic seaboard from the Isthmus of Panama to Venezuela, southward along the Pacitic to Equador, and in the interior to the upper waters of the Orinoco on its western frontier and to northern tributaries of the Amazon on the outskirts of Brazil, is about 504,778 square miles. Its southern boundary is one of the most definite landmarks on earth, being nothing less than the equator. Its total population is estimated at 2,955,255, including more than 200,000 aboriginal Indians, who dwell in the forests of the interior and of whose characteristics even the Colom-bians know little beyond the fact that they are peaceably disposed toward the civilized communities if they are not interfered with To show how little is known of some part of the country, it may be mentioned that the Colombian government has recently Will pay you to go see the bargains I am offering. A remarkable fall of a miner down 100 meters of shaft (say 223 feet) without being killed is recorded by M. Reumeaux. In The Bulletin de l'Industrie Minerale. Working with his brother in a gallery which issued on the shaft, he forget the direction in which he was pushing a truck; so it went over, and he after it, falling into some mudwith about three inches of water. He seems neither to have struck any of the wood debris nor the sides of the shaft, and be showed no contusions when he was helped out by his brother after about ten minutes. He could not, however, recall any of his impressions during the fall. The velocity on reaching the bottom would be about 140 feet, and time of fall 4.12 seconds. but it is thought he must have taken longer. It appears strange that he should have escaped simple sufficient and loss of consciousness during a time sufficient for the water to have drowned him.
